REVIEW

As the year comes to an end, the world faces a multitude of challenges: rising inflation, political and economic instability, human rights violations, escalating tension between nations, privacy infringements, discrimination, restrictions on religious freedom, increasing prices of food and energy, and the possibility of an upcoming recession.

2022 in Review provides a selection of relevant UN reports, news headlines, and trends concerning human rights and religious freedom in 2022. The United Nations Human Rights Council serves as the primary inter-governmental platform to address situations of violations of human rights around the world. Each year, the Human Rights Council holds three regular sessions in Geneva in March, June, and September. The resolutions adopted by the council are not legally binding, however, they do contain significant political commitments.

In 2022, the UN Human Rights Council held debates and passed resolutions on a wide range of human rights issues, including freedom of religion and belief, freedom of expression and hate speech, contemporary forms of slavery, human rights and neurotechnology, climate change, conscientious objection to military service, privacy in a digital age, human rights in law enforcement, migration, internal displacement, and refugees. Additionally, there have been other issues discussed that impact some countries, such as justice, arbitrary detention, the rights of indigenous peoples and people of African descent, older persons, hazardous substances and waste, enforced or involuntary disappearances, and the negative consequences of colonialism on human rights. Religious freedom is declining in most countries, and the number of restrictions and hostilities has increased, both in conflict zones and in some countries that claim to guarantee religious freedom. This has occurred despite considerable efforts to develop and implement numerous programs advocating for religious liberty.

The UN statistics for 2022 indicate several concerning global trends: people suffering from acute hunger, an increase in forced displacement, restriction of freedom, increased authoritarianism, conflict, and violence. By the end of 2022, the World Bank estimates that 8.5% of the total world population (685 million) will be extremely poor. According to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, 1 in every 78 people on earth has been forced to flee violence or persecution. Across the globe, more than 100 million people are displaced for the first time in history, including millions who fled Ukraine. During this difficult year, many people have experienced uncertainty, stress, fear, grief, and freedom restrictions. The UNDP 2022 Special Report on Human Security found that an estimated number of six out of seven people worldwide reported feeling insecure about many aspects of their lives, even before the COVID-19 pandemic. While uncertainty dominates our lives today, we shouldn't lose hope. "The world is not without a ruler. The program of coming events is in the hands of the Lord. The Majesty of heaven has the destiny of nations as well as the concerns of His church in His own charge" (EGW, 5T, 753). We must never forget that God is in control of history, and we should never lose sight of the wonderful promises He has made for our future.

THE RIGHTS OF PERSONS BELONGING TO RELIGIOUS OR BELIEF MINORITIES IN SITUATIONS OF CONFLICT AND INSECURITY

Report of the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief

3 June 2022 | A/HRC/49/44

In recent years, conflicts have become more common, and insecurity has grown, impacting people enjoyment to freedom of religion or belief. According to the United Nations Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, Dr. Ahmed Shaheed, around the world, conflicts were lasting longer than ever before, severely compromising religious minorities' rights, in particular their freedom of religion. Both state and non-state actors frequently target religious or belief minorities during conflict or insecurity. Hatred towards faith minorities is reflected in some school curriculums, creating a favorable environment for future generations to develop discriminatory attitudes.

In many countries, labeling religious or belief communities as "foreigners" or belonging to foreign groups creates hostility. Religious or belief minorities are more likely to feel threatened and vulnerable to violence as a result of discrimination, suspicion, and fear. It also has been reported that forced conversions have taken place in several countries as a means of forcing assimilation and the abandonment of faith identities. In order to make faith minorities' situation more precarious during crises, authorities have imposed restrictions on their practice of religion, including restricting their access to places of worship.

In the 49th Human Rights Council, the Special Rapporteur addressed the specific needs and vulnerabilities faced by minorities and discussed the reasons and mechanisms behind these vulnerabilities in the context of conflict. Religion or belief can also be used as an indicator of identity, often intersecting with other elements such as ethnicity, gender, race, and political affiliation, in order to target minority communities during crises with hostility, discrimination, and violence, forcing them to leave. The report proposed measures to protect and promote the rights of religious minorities during crises and to establish the foundations for a more inclusive peacebuilding process. ### COMBATING INTOLERANCE, NEGATIVE STEREOTYPING AND STIGMATIZATION OF, AND DISCRIMINATION, INCITEMENT TO VIOLENCE AND VIOLENCE AGAINST, PERSONS BASED ON RELIGION OR BELIEF

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

6 January 2022 | A/HRC/49/86

The report focuses on combating intolerance, negative stereotyping, stigmatization, discrimination, and incitement to violence against persons based on religion or belief. The Human Rights Council called on states to implement an action plan to combat intolerance, stereotypes, and stigmatization of people based on their religion or beliefs, as well as discrimination, incitement to violence, and violence against them. Members of minority communities have been particularly targeted by stigmatization and discrimination online and offline, and states must act urgently to address the use of the COVID-19 pandemic by state and non-state actors in some locations in order to harass, intimidate, and suppress members of specific communities, including religious or belief minorities.

In preventing and countering intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, human rights education represents the most effective strategy, empowering people with the knowledge and skills to address discriminatory behaviors. Policies and human rights education projects should be developed to address hate speech's root causes instead of prohibiting speech that does not meet the standard test of the Rabat Plan of Action on incitement to hatred and violence. ## CONTEMPORARY FORMS OF SLAVERY AFFECTING PERSONS BELONGING TO ETHNIC, RELIGIOUS AND LINGUISTIC MINORITY COMMUNITIES

Report of the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery

19 July 2022 | A/HRC/51/26

During the year 2022, the Declaration on the Rights of National, Ethnic, Religious, and Linguistic Minorities marked its thirty-fifth anniversary. As a commemorative report, the Special Rapporteur focuses on minorities' vulnerabilities and lived realities with regard to contemporary forms of slavery. In addition to national minorities, the report covers non-citizens, such as migrant workers, many of whom are minorities in their destination countries. The report identifies the main causes of contemporary forms of slavery affecting these groups and the main manifestations, such as chattel slavery; forced and bonded labor; domestic servitude; sexual slavery; child and forced marriage; and child labor. As a result of systematic discrimination, affected individuals and communities are unable to live a life in dignity and enjoy their human rights equally with others. As a consequence, negative stereotypes in the media, textbooks, and on the Internet contribute to the stigmatization of some communities. There is no respect for human dignity and equality when they are subjected to dehumanizing discourses that refer to "pollution" or "untouchability." These people are often subjected to debt bondage without adequate access to justice and have limited freedom to renounce inherited occupations or hazardous or degrading employment. ## CONFLICT PREVENTION THROUGH THE PROTECTION OF THE HUMAN RIGHTS OF MINORITIES

Report of the Special Rapporteur on minority issues

15 March 2022 | A/HRC/49/46

Hate speech and discrimination are becoming increasingly prevalent in certain political agendas and discourses, which can lead to a climate of fear among individuals and communities. Although online platforms provide minority groups and individuals with expanded opportunities for creating, structuring, and exchanging information, the same platforms also allow online 'hate speech', including hatred, intolerance or violence against those perceived as "different". Across the world, discriminatory practices and hateful messages are used to stigmatize ethnic and religious minorities.

During the 49th Human Rights Council, Fernand de Varennes, the UN Special Rapporteur on minority issues, highlighted the widespread use of hate speech on social media to target minorities. In addition, he describes state authorities' widespread failure to recognize or protect minorities from hate speech that is prohibited by law. He concludes by emphasizing the responsibility of States, civil society, and social media platforms to acknowledge that hate speech is mainly a minority issue and that, urgently, further steps need to be taken in order to fully and effectively implement human rights obligations. ### THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY IN THE DIGITAL AGE

August 2022 | A/HRC/51/17

Report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

New information and communication technologies are allowing individuals worldwide to improve the quality of their lives, providing easy access to information and communication, and encouraging innovation across many fields. There is no doubt that technology has a profound effect on modern life. In spite of this, technological advancements have become more controversial in recent years. This is because it has increased the ability of governments, companies, and individuals to carry out surveillance, interceptions, and data collection, which can violate or abuse rights, particularly privacy.

In accordance with the UN's understanding of human rights to privacy, no one is allowed to unlawfully interfere with a person's private life, family, home, or correspondence. The right to privacy also means the right to be protected by law against such interference. It recognizes that the exercise of the right to private life is essential to the realization of the right to freedom of expression, including the right to hold opinions without interference, including religious opinions, and the right to peaceful assembly and association. The latest report on privacy in the digital age, presented at the 51st UN Human Rights Council, focuses on the abuse of intrusive hacking tools ("spyware") by State authorities, the importance of robust encryption methods in ensuring human rights protection online, and the impacts of widespread digital monitoring of public spaces, both offline and online. ### INDIGENOUS PEOPLES AND THE RIGHT TO FREEDOM OF RELIGION OR BELIEF

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief

10 October 2022 | A/77/514

The Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, Ahmed Shaheed, initiates a critical dialogue within and beyond the UN system about obstacles and opportunities facing indigenous people's freedom of religion or belief. He asserts that indigenous religions and beliefs cannot be understood without acknowledging the historical and ongoing experiences of discrimination, violence, and hostility that threaten their spiritual, cultural, and physical survival.

There are 476 million indigenous people living in 90 countries, speaking more than 4,000 languages, and owning, occupying, or managing over one-quarter of the world's land.

The report highlights the impediments indigenous people face, such as access to justice, civic and political exclusion, socioeconomic challenges, a lack of equality, restrictions on freedom of religion or belief, and restrictions on indigenous spiritual manifestations. In addition, the Special Rapporteur acknowledged the historical exclusion of many indigenous peoples from the development of international law instruments related to their rights to freedom, religion, and belief. ### FREEDOM OF RELIGION AND BELIEF

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 31 March 2022 | A/HRC/RES/49/5

Religious minorities are marginalized by hatred, discrimination, intolerance, and violence manifested in derogatory stereotyping, negative profiling, and stigmatization. The purpose of this resolution is to express concern over the continued acts of intolerance and violence against people from religious communities and minorities around the world and emphasize that freedom of religion or belief and freedom of expression are interdependent and interconnected, highlighting how these rights can be used in the fight against intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief. The primary responsibility of states is to promote and protect human rights, including the rights of people belonging to religious minorities, including their right to freely practice their religion or belief. Education plays an important role in promoting tolerance, which involves the acceptance and respect of diversity by the public, including with regard to religious expression, and the resolution emphasizes that education, particularly at school, should contribute meaningfully to the promotion of tolerance and the elimination of discrimination based on religion or belief. ### THE RIGHTS TO FREEDOM OF PEACEFUL ASSEMBLY AND OF ASSOCIATION

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 8 July 2022 | A/HRC/RES/50/17

The resolution reaffirms the importance of freedom of peaceful assembly and association in the exercise of civil rights, religious and political rights, economic rights, and social rights. In order to build a truly inclusive society and strengthen freedom, the right to peaceful assembly is fundamental. Individuals have the right to peaceful assembly and association, which provides them with the opportunity to express political, religious, and other views, as well as to engage in social and educational activities. In this resolution, states are encouraged to support diverse civil society participation, including women, children, youth, human rights defenders, the elderly, people with disabilities, people from ethnic, religious, and national backgrounds, linguistic and racial minorities, migrants, refugees, and indigenous groups. Read more on freedom of peaceful assembly and association resolution: <https://undocs.org/A/hrc/res/50/17>.

FREEDOM OF OPINION AND EXPRESSION

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 8 July 2022 | A/HRC/RES/50/15

Freedom of opinion, expression, and the right to seek, receive, and impart information and ideas, regardless of borders, is affirmed in this resolution as a human right that is guaranteed to all, whether it is spoken, written, in print, or in art or any other medium. The freedom of expression is considered critical to combating corruption and disinformation, strengthening public awareness, the rule of law, and effective governance. Freedom of opinion and expression is one of the most important indicators of the protection of other human rights and freedoms, and it is important to keep in mind that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent, and interrelated, both online and offline. ### NEUROTECHNOLOGY AND HUMAN RIGHTS

13 October 2022 | A/HRC/RES/51/3

Resolution A/HRC/51/L.3 on neurotechnology and human rights

In recent years, a new generation of neurotechnology has emerged and is being promoted as a necessary development. A business based on such emerging technologies could be extremely profitable and could increase power imbalances. A large amount of funding is allocated to “brain” initiatives in order to propel advances in research. In response to these massive investments worldwide, member states at the United Nations are establishing their positions in relation to these technologies in a new technological race.

In a United Nations resolution, “Assessing the Impact of Neurotechnology on Human Rights,” it is stated that neurotechnology will help to improve cognitive capacities by connecting the brain directly to digital networks in the coming years. As neurotechnology develops and becomes more available, it is increasingly likely that this technology will impact and undermine human rights. There are risks associated with neurotechnology, including aspects that are fundamental to being humans, such as dignity, autonomy, the right to privacy, and the right to freedom of thought. Ahmed Shaheed, the Special Rapporteur (SR) on Freedom of Religion or Belief (2016-2022), provided his interim report on freedom of thought, highlighting that “neurotechnology can already modify or manipulate thoughts inside the brain.” Many experts already agree that current and existing legal frameworks are unprepared for this new technology. On this matter, the United Nations adopted three resolutions in 2022 on neurotechnology and its impact on human rights. Read more on neurotechnology and human rights resolution: <https://undocs.org/A/HRC/RES/51/3>.

COUNTERING CYBERBULLYING

11 October 2022 | A/HRC/RES/51/10

Resolution A/HRC/RES/51/10 on countering cyberbullying

In order to prevent cyberbullying, this Resolution emphasizes the importance of ensuring children's "effective and meaningful participation", including their contributions, views, and recommendations. Furthermore, the Resolution recognizes that “relevant regulatory frameworks and legislation, and safeguards on the conception, design, use, development, further deployment and impact assessments of new and emerging digital technologies” should provide “appropriate safeguards and human oversight” while also providing “meaningful participation of all stakeholders”, including the general public, and putting children’s interests first.

The right to privacy are important for the prevention of violence, including any form of abuse and sexual harassment, in particular against women, children and persons with disabilities, as well as any form of discrimination, including cyberbullying and cyberstalking, that may take place online.

In addition to disrupting children’s development, cyberbullying can cause profound harm, as victims often experience anxiety, panic, distress, confusion, anger, insecurity, lowered self-esteem, a strong sense of shame, and even suicidal thoughts. ### CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTION TO MILITARY SERVICE

Analytical report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

11 May 2022 | A/HRC/50/43

According to the Human Rights Council, every person affected by military service must be informed about the right to conscientious objection to military service and the means of acquiring conscientious objector status. As outlined in the Beirut Declaration on Faith for Rights, the right to freedom of thought and conscience precedes all other freedoms, since they are intrinsically linked to human life, to individual choice, and to religious freedom. In accordance with the 18 commitments and toolkit for #Faith4Rights, article 18 of the Covenant does not permit any limitations of thought and conscience, which are protected under international human rights law.

This report analyzes developments concerning conscientious objection to military service since 2017, promising practices, and continuing challenges. Some states have adopted laws and regulations introducing viable alternative service of a civilian nature and decriminalizing conscientious objection, resulting in the release of imprisoned objectors. Despite this, many people who wish to exercise their right to conscientious objection to military service continue to be violated by some States and de facto authorities because those rights are either not recognized or are not fully implemented. Read more on Conscientious Objection to Military Service Report: <https://undocs.org/en/A/HRC/50/43>.

TERRORISM AND HUMAN RIGHTS

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 7 October 2022

7 October 2022 | A/HRC/RES/51/24

A key point of the resolution is that terrorism and violent extremism restrict the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including political, civil, economic, social, and cultural rights. International peace and security are weakened by terrorism, which threatens the territorial integrity and security of states, the stability of governments, and the rule of law and democracy.

In the context of this resolution, it is stated that violence, extremism, and terrorism cannot and should not be associated with any religion, nationality, civilization, or ethnicity. In order to prevent and combat terrorism and violent extremism, the resolution emphasizes the importance of tolerance, pluralism, inclusion, and respect for diversity, dialogue among civilizations, as well as the development of interfaith and intercultural understanding and respect among people, including at the national, regional, and global levels.
